SO. WEYMOUTH AND ABBINGTON

The Cheerful Teller.

The bellows grin, with all his might,

While at the blazing forge he stands,

The blacksmith blows his blackened

With spotted honesty are white.

And while his strong arm swings,

This cherry song he sings:

"The bellows blow for well I know

The love of friend and neighbor,

And many joys known here below

Are won by honest labor."

Snow-white with heat he likes to see

The iron on the anvil lie,

And purpose glazes in his eyes

As he the bar beats lustily.

And while the anvil rings,

This is the song he sings:

"The iron I heat, for work is sweet,

It is my only treasure;

It makes my humble life complete

With comfort and with pleasure."

An untold wheel lies on the ground,

Placed there by his own steady hand,

And soon with a strong iron hand

He binds the wooden circle round.

And as his right arm swings

"The wheel I bind, and joy I find

In this firm iron foot--"

The symbol of some great strong man!

That makes the world grow better."

He is a plain and hearty man,

This worker by the forge and fire,

His life has one supreme desire--

To do the very best he can.

And as his hammer swings

"This is the song he sings:

"Work on, work on, oh, tolling one:

Be hopeful and not fearful,

And better will your task be done

If you but make it cheerful."

Ah, well for all who toil 't would be

If peace within their hearts would ring,

And bid all discontent take wing.

And like a bird of passage, fleet!

Then they to flying time Might sing this simple rhyme:

"We toil, we toil, 'mid life's turmoil,

And will not harbor sorrow,

For though we may be poor today,

We may be rich tomorrow!"

AMBUSHED.

AN ADVENTURE IN SOUTH AFRICA.

I was stopping for a time at Winburg, a small town in the Orange Free State, in November, 1881. I was passing my time in a hammock under the tree, smoking, reading, and I must confess, feeling pretty tired of the monotony of my existence in South Africa.

The Basuto Land Kafir had some time previously taken to their heads that taxes were things that no heathen should be called upon to pay, and consequently they were in rebellion. After some small skirmishes had taken place between the Cape Colony troops and detachments of the rebels, it soon became clear that an extensive war was coming. Cape Colony, awakening slowly to the enormity of the danger threatening her, commenced organizing corps of colonial volunteers, and it was at this time that I almost determined to offer my services as an old imperial officer to the Colonial government.

I was lying one morning as usual in my hammock, having just finished the latest Cape Town paper (fourteen days old), half asleep, half awake, when I heard my name shouted from the outside of the inclosure. Glancing up I was delighted to see an old friend, Colonel Griffiths, R. E. C. M. G., as genial, brave and true-hearted an Irishman as I had ever met. He was in the inclosure in a uniform. To jump up, to shout to my worthy aborigine to take the colonel's horse, was to me a second and then, growing big by the hand,

I, inspired by his words of fortune loved the pleasure of his company.

"Well," answered the colonel, "the Government wants me to get to Maseru as quickly as possible and take over the command, as that imp of a Lord (of a powerful Kafir chief) has been making things hum a bit for the residents and the force of colonial troops stationed there, and I am going to organize two volunteer regiments, one white and one black, and if you feel inclined to do some more soldiering I can offer you a troop."

My surprise was only exceeded by my joy at this opportunity of relieving the monotony of South African life. I lost no time in accepting the offer, and during a capital tiffin, I arranged to join the colonel at Maseru in ten days, giving me time to fetch up from Natal the necessary bit of an officer.

It was a bright summer morning seven days after my interview with the colonel that, mounted on my old and tired hunter, a valise strapped on the back of my saddle, a pocket full of tobacco, a Martini-Henry express rifle (one of my favorite weapons), my old regimental sword slung to my saddle, I set out to join my colonel and assume command of my troop. My destination was distant some five hundred miles, and

The Narrow Way.

Tell me, ye saints,
And kings of old,
Where shall we find
The land of gold?
The heavenly land?
With joys untold?

Here what the Spirit Hid to say:
"It lies beyond
The gates of day--
Just at the end Of the narrow way."

"They who shall choose
To walk therein,
Must bear the cross,
And cast out sin;
And live therein,
They then shall win."

There are sharpest thorns
In this narrow way:
There are blackest clouds
To hide the day;
But hear what the Spirit Hath to say:

"Cheer up! cheer up!
Oh, heart of gloom!
For every thorn
Shall soon be plucked,
In the garden of God,
Where there is no sin."

"A crown for him
Who day by day,
With patient feet,
That never stray,
Bears his cross
In the narrow way."

---Mrs. M. A. Kilduff in the Ledger.

THE STRANGER.

It was years ago, Basie, when I was but eighteen, and just engaged to Frank Fenton. If you want to hear about it, sit down on the stool at my feet, and prepare to be bored.

We had been sweethearts for a long time. Went to church and singing-school together; rode, walked, danced, and took long rows on the river which ran past my father's house. In fact, this had been going on for so long a time that we finally decided that we might as well be married together, and so the preliminary arrangements were began, and our wedding-day drew near.

We lived on the banks of a river-- one of the loveliest streams in Louisiana-- a quiet spot some distance from any plantation; but as soon as our marriage took place young folks were to remove to a neighboring parish, and thither Frank went, shortly before the wedding, to prepare our new home.

He left me busy as a bee with the house and arrangements for the affair, which was to be a grand one for the country, as my father was a well-to-do planter and I the only child.

He had been absent about a fortnight, when one day father came, with a troubled face, into the room where I was sitting, surrounded by lace and mullin and dainty necessities of toilet, which were just as much the fashion then as they are now. Basie, regular and calm, he said, hurriedly, "I've got to go to-night. I came near forgetting the appointment, and I'll have to hurry right fast to get there on time.
Can you do without me?" I laughed and nodded; then suddenly an uneasy feeling took possession of me. I remembered the money--quite a large sum-- which Frank and I were to "share the world," and which lay securely hidden away in the bottom of a chest-of-drawers, the next egg of our future fortune.

I knew that I was destined to a lonely night of it, for father could not possibly return within twenty-four hours; the servants had all gone to a "breakdown," on a neighboring plantation, except an aged negro, Aunt Dinah by name; my mother was an invalid, weak and nervous; I felt that, alone as I was, the outlook was not very encouraging.
Father observed my troubled expression.

"I don't see how I can help it, daughter," he said gravely. "This is a very important matter, and admits of no delay. It is the fault of my teacher's memory; had I fully remembered the engagement with the square I would have kept some of the servants at home as protection for you."

But I was no coward, and so I kissed him and laughed away his anxiety, and saw him depart with the gate behind him, and as he rode down the avenue which led to the outer gate, I saw him turn in the saddle and gaze after me anxiously once more.

I returned to my household duties and my pleasant task amid the billows of lace and mullin, and so sang and worked the long, bright day away.
It was nearly sunset.
I had persuaded mother to lie upon a couch, which I had pushed out upon the vine-covered veranda, and seating myself beside her, I began to read about some wild old tale of supernatural horror, upon which I had stumbled. Before half finished I had wakened myself into a state of nervousness, and as I noticed the pale face of my mother, I tossed the book upon the table, with a contemptuous expression, and arose to make her tea.

At that moment the gate behind me clicked, and as I turned in its direction I could not suppress a cry of alarm.
My eyes fell upon a strange sight.
The figure of a woman--a very dark in size and stature--and in a faded black dress, with a battered bonnet upon her head, and a torn shawl about her, stood in the doorway.

Slowly and hesitatingly the creature moved up the walk, until she had reached the porch. Frank was holding her close upon my own; and felt my hand piled in his own. I looked at my eyes. Frank was holding her close upon us, with a pair of round, hood- like black eyes.

Then she spoke, in a voice clear and well-modulated:
"I have lost my way, ladies," she said, beseechingly, "may I crave a night's shelter?"

I gazed at my mother. She was pale and trembled violently.
I had conceived an unaccountable aversion to the small stranger; but who could have the heart to turn a woman coming down, dark and threatening, for the sky was overcast, and there were signs of an approaching thunder storm, and the wind moaned dreadfully in the branches of the pine tree.

So I told her that she might remain; but I resolved to know no slumber that night, but to watch the long hours throughout.

My mother must not be alarmed; so sending the stranger to the kitchen with Aunt Dinah to get some refreshments, I coaxed mother to take her tea, and carried her off to bed in triumph.

It was 10 o'clock before I left her sound asleep and stole off to the kitchen to take an observation. On the threshold I passed, my heart beat wildly, my brain seemed on fire; I trembled so that I could scarcely stand. I pushed the door ajar and glanced in. What a sight met my astonished eyes! The dwarf was standing erect, and young, and lithe; the woman's garments had been discarded, and I saw before me a man, small, but muscular, and with a diabolical face. He was stooping over the form of Aunt Dinah, in one hand a vial, which he held to her nostrils. I comprehended the situation at a glance.
Aunt Dinah was drugged; even the frail protection of her presence was gone, and the next step would be robbery, perhaps murder.

The villain replaced the vial in his pocket, with a grin on his ugly face.
"There!" he ejaculated, "that will work. With the old woman out of the way, the rest is easy. Lucky that I know where to look for the money; it is in the old woman's room, I saw the girl put it there. Let me see, right hand corner, top drawer in dressing table."

He fastened over me then, my own cardianness, when father had given the pocketbook into my keeping; the open window near us, and some gay words which I had uttered, all came back to me.
I was so frightened, it seemed as if I should die. Then calmer thoughts succeeded; and I resolved to fight for that money to the death. Softly I stole away, and re-entered my mother's apartment. Taking the pocketbook from the drawer, I hid it in my bosom, and then, passing to assure myself that she still slept, I turned to the hall where our small provision of fire-arms were stored. Oh, heaven! They were gone! A low, horrible chuckle fell upon my ears. The robber stood at my side, a look of triumph on his hateful face.

"Well," he sneered boldly, "where is 'What do you mean?' I gasped.
"The money, of course. I've just been to the old woman's room, but I find you've been too many for me. Now, girl, give it up!" he stepped closer to me and raised one hand threateningly; his awful eyes glared into mine; his lips, as they opened, resembled those of some savage wild animal. "I know you have the money hidden here. Give it up, or I'll kill you!"

With a low cry of fear I turned and fled. Back to the large, old kitchen, my heart surging and beating madly, I flew like the wind. Old Dinah still lay upon the floor in most unconsciousness. I shook her and called aloud and shrieked for help, but no other sound broke the stillness save the low, dreadful laugh of the robber, who had followed me.

"Stop that noise!" he growled.
"You're wasting breath, you know. S's drugged and laid out for a long time.
Safe out of this. I want that money.
Give it to me and I promise to leave you in peace; refuse, and--" "I never will!" I cried, as bravely as I could. Again, that horrible, mocking laugh. He sprang forward, and seized my arm; one hand passed around my waist and held me tightly, the other prepared to close about my throat.

Just at that moment my eyes fell upon the huge brick oven, something unknown to these days. Basie, in my innocent structure occupying one side of the kitchen, I noticed that the wide door had been left open, and a sudden thought--an inspiration--darted into my mind. It was worth risking at all events.

The villain's hand was pressing closer about my throat; I felt a dreadful choking sensation; I felt a dreadful choking sensation. I should die.
I should die. Now--or never--I thrust one hand, quickly, into the bosom of my dress, and snatching the pocket-book therefrom with a quick, sudden movement, I threw it into the oven--away in--I could hear it fall upon the bottom, with a heavy thud, for most of the money was in gold.

With a horrible cry of rage the villain sprang into the oven. I darted toward the huge door, I seized it in both hands; with superhuman efforts I pushed it shut and slid the heavy bolt into its place. I was saved! Then I sank upon the floor in blissful insensibility.

I was aroused by the pressure of lips upon my own; and felt my hand

to his heart, his face pale and anxious. He had returned unexpectedly; and see- ing a light burning in the house--an unusual occurrence at so late an hour, it was midnight--and fearing that I was ill--he had ventured to stop. I told him the whole story; and, old as I am, I have never forgotten the look on his face as he clasped me to his heart. It did not take him long to ride to the nearest town and summon the sheriff with a posse of men. The oven was opened and the wretch within, insen- sible and half dead, was dragged forth and away to justice. He was proven to be an old offender, and soon received a long sentence.

I was quite the heroine of the country around, for a long time afterward; but heroism were not my aim, and I never desired for a repetition of that night's experience.

A Steamship Stoker's Life.

The stokers on one of the great ocean steamers work four hours at a stretch, in a temperature ranging from 120 to 160 degrees. The quarters are close, and they must take care that while feeding one furnace their arms are not burned on the one behind them.
Ventilation is furnished through a shaft reaching down to the middle of their quarters. Each stoker tends four furnaces, spending perhaps two or three minutes at each, then dashes to the air-pipe to take his turn at cooling off, and to take another call to his furnace.

When the watch is over, the men go to their quarters, which are as close as the quarters of the soldiers. They are perspiring through long, cold passages to the fore-cabin, where they turn in for eight hours.

One man, twenty-eight years old, who was interviewed by a reporter, had been employed at the furnaces since he was fourteen years old. He weighed 150 pounds, and was ruddy and seemingly happy. He confessed that his work was terribly hard, but "it came harder on those who did not follow it regularly. But if we get plenty of rest," he said, "and take care of ourselves we are all right. Here's a mate of mine, nearly seventy years old, who has been a stoker all his life and can do as good work as I can."

Stokers never have the consumption, and rarely catch cold. Their grog had been knocked off on the English and American lines because the men got drunk too often, and the grog did them more harm.

"When I used to take my grog I did work just like a lion while the effect lasted. I'd throw in my coal like a giant, and not mind the heat a bit; but when it worked off, as it did in a very few minutes, I was that weak that a child could upset me. Take a man dead drunk before the fire, and the heat would sober him off in half an hour or give him a stroke of apoplexy."

Why We are Right-Handed.

Primitive man, being by nature a fighting animal, fought for the most part at first with his canine teeth, his nails and his fists, till, in process of time, he added to those early and natural weapons the further persuasions of a club or shillash. He also fought, as Darwin has conclusively shown, in the main for the purpose of the ladies of his kind, against other members of his own sex and species. And if you fight, you soon learn to protect the most exposed and vulnerable portion of your body. Or, if you don't, natural selection manages it for you by killing you off as an immediate consequence.

To the boxer, wrestler, hand-to-hand combatant, the most vulnerable portion is undoubtedly the head. A hard blow, well delivered on the left breast, will easily kill, or at any rate stun, even a strong man of vigorous frame.
In early times man have used the right hand to fight with, and have employed the left arm chiefly to cover the head and to parry a blow aimed at that specially vulnerable region. And when weapons of offense and defense superseded mere fists and teeth, it is the right hand that grasps the spear or sword, while the left holds over the head, for defense, the shield or buckler.

From this simple origin, then, the whole difference of right and left in civilized life takes its beginning. At first, no doubt, the superiority of the right hand was only felt in the manner of fighting. But that alone gave it, a distinct pull, and paved the way at last for the supremacy elsewhere. Journal of Health.

Japanese Babies.

In Japan you can tell a baby's age by its hair. The fuzz is shaved from the scalp of the Japanese infant as soon as it is born; when it grows to the age of a certain number of months a ring of hair is allowed to remain surrounding the bald ovals of the crown. A few months later a little tuft is blocked out in the center of the scalp, and a palm-tree like wig grows up in it. Then other little wigs are allowed to come down under the ear, and, at last, the hair is grown all over the head. This shaving of the head makes the hair very stiff, and the Japanese has his head covered with stiff, black wires.
He looks as if his head were one giant cockle, and he has this crop to the length of about one inch. The old fashion of shaving a strip from forehead to crown, and of wearing the hair in a top, is doing it up on the edge of this bald strip in the shape of an old-fashioned door-knocker, is being done away with in the cities, and you find it only in the back country, and in those who pride themselves on belonging to the old regime. Courier Journal.

FOR FARM AND GARDEN.

ONE GOOD RESULT.
At a late butter making competition in England, held at Colchester, and open to all comers, all the prizes were awarded to pupils at the dairy school at Ipswich. This shows what systematic training will do toward making good butter makers, and we only wish those who are interested in the subject in this country would profit by this most excellent example. American Dairyman.

DON'T KEEP FOWL STOCK.

Please listen to a few advisory suggestions, such as are especially seasonable in the winter and will bear repeating annually. It will not pay to keep poor, unprofitable stock at any time, and particularly through the winter. Every farmer who raises stock has some which will not pay to keep longer. Just as soon as stock reach maturity they should be sold. It is a daily loss to keep them longer, for they soon consume their own value in food. Hogs that are also or ten months old should be fattened and killed. Cows that are getting old should be sold off. Two or three year old steers should be sold. The flock of sheep should be culled out and the old and weak sold and sold as soon as possible. Horses that are not needed in order. Horses that are not needed should be put into marketable shape and sent to market. Get rid of the poorest feed the balance with what they would have eaten. Hold on to the best, and continue to make them better still by good care and feeding. Weekly Witness.

GROWING POTATOES IN RIDGES.

If the ground is rich and reasonably free from weeds, the potato crop is better grown in ridges than in hills with rows both ways. The small annual weeds do not much matter, as in the ridge system the potatoes are planted deeply, and the field is harrowed thoroughly before the potatoes are up, thus destroying the small weeds as soon as they germinate. A good acre of potatoes can be grown per acre of the close-growing varieties which have small tubers and grow their tubers in a bunch.
It seems a waste of land to devote a space of three feet or more each way to grow a hill of these varieties. Some farmers make hills three feet apart each way, and two feet eight inches the other, thus cultivating the ground in regular rows. A good acre of po-
